Dear Dr. Nasution,

According to the review process, your article needs major revision (see below).

Sincerely,

Dr. Iulian Rusu

Editor-in-Chief EJST

1. The authors focused their work on the situation in Indonesia. Of course, this approach is consistent with the title of the work. However, it must be emphasized that in other parts of the Islamic world, there is no full consensus on restrictions that limit religious practices, such as Iran.
2. In the Research Methods section, the authors describe the method, which is obviously correct, but they do not specify which journals they researched (indexing in Scopus is too general information), how many journals were there, from what period these journals came from, how many issues were examined. I believe that the authors should describe the method in more detail.
3. At page 5 the authors say: "As a rainbow appears after a storm and as a disaster that befalls the earth, there must be a lesson that can be learned after this problem has passed. It could be that Allah is testing His servants to become better [19]." There is no information on how many people have contracted coronavirus in mosques or during other religious rituals?
4. There is no information in the Conclusions whether religious practice has changed as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic restrictions? After the mosques opened, did the people stop coming to pray together? Or maybe the number of participants in common prayer has increased?
5. The references are not written according to journal's rules.
