Title and Abstract

Title The Political Dynamics of Islamophobia in Jokowi's Era: A Discourse Analysis of Online Media Reporting
Abstract This article investigates the online media reporting of Islamophobic policies during the presidency of Joko Widodo, Indonesia's current president. The study comprises a critical discourse analysis, which identifies three reporting dimensions, namely micro, mezzo, and macro. The article finds that discriminatory policies against Indonesian Muslims have triggered the emergence of news of Islamophobia in government policies. Politically, this causes Islamophobic propaganda, which, for the government, is a form of discourse struggle, the aim of which is to secure public support. Reports of government-backed Islamophobic propaganda moved the government to amend some of its policies, and facilitated the emergence of counter-narrative news, which refuted these accusations of Islamophobia. This study also shows that accusations of Islamophobia against the government are a result of the trauma many Muslims experienced, historically, long before the Jokowi presidency.

Reviewer A:

ORIGINALITY

It is interesting to see media discourse used as an approach to analyze political dynamics, since this is not particularly common. This approach comes at the issue from a new angle, rather than offering a new analysis

THE DEPTH OF LITERATURES

There is adequate literature on discourse analysis. The studies referred to in para 6 seems to be a bit of a mish-mash – its not really clear what thread ties them together

FINDINGS PRESENTATION

I think the paper potentially has something interesting to offer. However, I don't currently find the textual analysis particularly convincing. Significant chunks of the texts are quotes from key individuals. Their choice of vocabulary is significant, but it says more about them as individuals than about how the various media outlets are framing the issues. I would have liked to see more analysis of why particular media outlets presented issues in certain ways, where their sympathies lie, who their key readership is etc. Much of what is presented in the mezzo and macro analysis is known from the political science literature. Where the paper could offer something new is in showing how this plays out in the media (in the vocabulary chosen etc). In my view this would require a larger corpus of text, rather than the four short examples given.

IMPLICATIONS FOR UNDERSTANDING ISLAM IN INDONESIA AND SOUTHEAST ASIA

Yes

TECHNICAL WRITING

This seems to be a direct translation from the Indonesian, which makes it quite confusing to read in English. It needs a strong English language edit. Alternatively, it may be better to publish the article in Indonesian
